Dear Friends:

CREEPING INTRUSIONS

Our friend's email had an urgent sound. She is always bright, filled with faith and joy, but today her note was filled with solemn concern...concern for our future. She ticked off a list of things that have changed in our world and cited current agendas, here and abroad, focused on the abject control and desired destruction of the "God" influence in our Nation. She was not wielding some verbal ax against a person; she rightly knew that we are facing an assignment that originates from Hell. Another "spirit" drives this frenzy.

In her note, she said some very likely prophetic things about the calamity that could be just ahead and she ended with these words, "My conclusion is to pray without ceasing...I know God is awesome, but man is a mess and keeps eliminating Him from their lives...I'm on guard." I thought to myself, "You go, girl!"

On the same day of my friend's email, I came across a little publicized news item that nudged me a bit higher up the prayer pole.

On Tuesday Night, the White House hosted a dinner commemorating the celebration of Ramadan, the month during which Muslims believe that Mohammed was divinely given the Quran. This shindig has been thrown before (The roasted pig luau theme was shot down) and, for the time being, we still have a Freedom of Religion observance for all legal citizens but I did find it disconcerting that, just four months earlier, the National Day of Prayer did not merit the same courtesy in the hosting of an official event to observe that special day.

Shirley Dobson, Chairman of the National Day of Prayer mused out loud, that our leaders, "...have not only regularly passed up opportunities to affirm and celebrate America's Judeo Christian heritage, but at times, have appeared to go out of the way to suggest the opposite is true". It does raise a few "red" (think czars) flags. After all, our world has already heard the pronouncement, "America is not a Christian Nation".

Regarding the dinner, it is likely that 17 year old Rifka Bary couldn't make the event; she was too busy running for her life in the Orlando area. You see, Rifka, raised in an Ohio Muslim home, committed the unpardonable sin. (And you thought that it was blaspheming the Holy Spirit). She had knowingly prayed a prayer asking Jesus to come into her life and to be her Lord and Savior. Then, to complicate matters, her folks discovered dangerous contraband in her room, a covert copy of "Purpose Driven Life".

In a frightful rage, her dad, picked up her computer, waved it over her head and screamed, "If you have this Jesus in your heart, you are dead to me! You are no longer my daughter. I will kill you!" Later her folks told her that she was going to be sent back to Sri Lanka to be "dealt with". Right about this point she's probably thinking, "I'm going to Disneyworld!"

It seems Dad didn't belong to one of the Sunday at 11, one hour obligation Mosques. No, Pop fellowshipped with a gang that actually believes and practices what the Quran has to say about Jihad, Christians, infidels and the occasional rebellious daughter.

One of the "request for protection" legal filings contained volatile terminology like Hamas, al-Qaida, extremist speakers, and terrorist-related crimes. The legal brief says, "This is a unique mosque that has unique beliefs and is extremely dangerous". I can just hear that opening hymn, "Gimme that Peaceful Religion, it's good enough for me!"

Whether you want to admit it or not, this type of influence, pressure, opposition and intensity will continue to increase. This mindset drives extremely misguided cruel beliefs that go beyond the threatening of a young girl. Just this week, an entire country caved in to it.

21 years ago, four days before Christmas, Abdelbaset Ali al-Megrahi, blew up Pam Am Flight 103 killing 270 people over a piece of Scottish farmland. He was convicted and jailed but I guess they didn't have the guts to throw the key away.

This week, with only about a half hour warning to their allies, the British government, in a burst of overwhelming compassion, said that since our boy was dying of cancer, he should be released to die in dignity with his family. Again, another courtesy not afforded to 270 innocent people who would never be home for Christmas. The leaders folded like a cheap lawn chair.

When "Al" deplaned in Libya, he was met with a hero's welcome. Flags were flying; music and praises filled the air. Reprobate, waving fool, MOEammar Kaddafi (without brothers LARRYmar and CURLYmar) was there to greet him and failed to mention the dead left back on that Scottish hill. Pressure, threats and intimidation had won a victory and they yucked it up.

Truth is, according to all the data, the Muslim thrust has already overtaken much of Europe and the growth continues to happen, through multiple births and coerced conversions, at a mind boggling rate. At this quickened pace, infiltration will soon be too overwhelming to overcome and its major influences on policy, procedure and freedom will only amplify the agenda. The agenda of domination or annihilation.

It is my understanding that thousands of our British fellow Believers and intercessors are praying harder than ever. They are fighting a valiant battle. Let's covenant to stand with them in those intercessions.

We all need to be more like my email friend, with an "eyes wide open" concern, mixed with active participation and prayerful vigilance, we must stand.

Regarding our present plight, Paul the Apostle pegged it correctly, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

The fight gets tougher each day and I guess we should be more compassionate to our Brit Brothers. After all, without our focused prayerful diligence, met with supernatural intervention, we're just a few years behind them.

Michael
